The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, JANUARY 28th, 1914.

For several months past quite an army of brigands under the leadership of one rejoicing in the magic name of "White Wolf" has been roaming about the Province of Honan sacking and pillaging towns and villages and establishing a veritable reign of terror wherever they moved. Kwangtung has long had the unenviable reputation of being the Province of China where brigandage most extensively prevails, but we think that distinction more rightly belongs to Honan. We say this with no desire to minimise the gravity of the state of affairs which prevailed for so long in Kwangtung. We use the past tense because the steps taken by the present Governor-General would seem to have proved fairly effective, if we may judge of this from the fact that so much less is now heard of brigandage and lawlessness in the province; and, at all events, there has been nothing in Kwangtung to compare with the campaign of murder and rapine which has been going on in the province of Honan for the past five or six months. The "White Wolf" seems to have organized the disaffected elements of the province into a considerable force, recently stated to be 7,000 strong, with 500 horsemen, all armed with up-to-date rifles. It is obvious that a brigand force of this strength is capable of playing havoc wherever it decides to operate. The Provincial troops have signally failed to suppress the band, and in the last six months this brigand force has been responsible for the deaths of many hundreds of law-abiding people and the destruction by fire of many scores of buildings. What they have managed to levy and loot only the "White Wolf," and his officers probably know. A short account given by a missionary of the visit paid by the band this month to the town of Kuangchow speaks of the "White Wolf" and his men "looting every house and shop, and killing and wounding many scores of people." The city had been previously reconnoitred by spies, who, having obtained all the information they needed, set the Yamen on fire, and when the main force entered the city at daybreak, "all the officials, except the mandarin, were killed." The sacking of Kuangchow led to renewed representations to the Chinese Government by the British and American Legations, who demanded that effective measures should be taken to repress brigandage in Honan, where the lives and property of foreign missionaries are being endangered. But for the presence of missionaries in these cities of the interior it would seem that this brigand force would be permitted still to continue its campaign of pillage and murder. It is true that at many points the provincial troops have come in contact with the band, from time to time; engagements have been fought with some slaughter on both sides, but the fact that the "White Wolf" and his gang continue to roam over the Province sacking towns wherever they go, shows how futile have been the measures taken by the provincial authorities to deal with him. This state of affairs has prevailed now for many months in the province of Honan, and is quite time that the Central Government took strong action in the matter. The Turin has been degraded, and the high military officers of the Province deprived of their rank, but, following the usual practice in China, they are warned that unless they wipe out their past offences by suppressing the brigands, they will be more severely punished. Meanwhile, the Central Government has taken the more effective measure of sending to the Province a body of trained troops more capable of doing the work. Many of the missionaries have narrowly escaped losing their lives. As far back as October last the "White Wolf" held five adults and three children to ransom in the city of Tsao-yang, which he converted into a shambles, some two thousand of the inhabitants being murdered by the robbers, and at the present time great apprehension exists regarding the fate of missionaries stationed at Kwangshan-hsien and Kwang-chau, two of the places which the brigands have recently taken. That conditions like these should have continued for so long is highly discreditable to the Government, and it is a noteworthy circumstance that the Central Government has been moved to take effective action only in consequence of the pressure brought to bear by the Legations in the interests of foreigners living in the regions where the "White Wolf" is operating.

A Chinese paper published in Peking reports that six of the eight members of Parliament who were arrested some time ago have been released.

Sir Haviland de Sausmarez, Judge of H.M.'s Supreme Court, at Shanghai, expects to leave for Hongkong at the end of this week to sit in the Hongkong Appeal Court.

Two men have been arrested in connection with the armed robbery at Reclamation Street, Yaumati, a few days ago, and at the Magistracy yesterday they were remanded in custody.

Mr. John Carey Hall, C.M.G., I.S.O., British Consul-General in Yokohama, has retired from the Consular Service after forty-six years' work in China and Japan, The Asiatic Society of Japan, of which Mr. Hall was formerly President, gave a dinner in his honour last week.

Yesterday was the birthday of H.M. the Emperor of Germany, who is now 55 years of age. S.M.S. Luchs is in port and the customary salutes were fired at noon and British, American and Japanese warships in the harbour were dressed in honour of the occasion. Owing to yesterday being a general holiday, Dr. Crull, the Acting Consul, is "At Home" at the Consulate this morning.

The marriage of Lieut. J. J. Kirkpatrick, 27th Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, son of the late Col. H. C. Kirkpatrick, and Gisela, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Gustave Detring, Commissioner of Customs and Mrs. Evelyn Detring, of Tientsin, took place at the Church of St. Louis, Tientsin, on the 14th instant.

CHINA NEW YEAR.

The new year festival was as generally observed by the Chinese as ever, and perhaps the most remarkable aspect of the holiday was the drab appearance of the street crowds. Formerly, every son of Han arrayed himself in his finest silks for the New Year, but on this occasion the proportion wearing a drab compromise between a foreign suit and the Chinese work-a-day dress was very noticeable indeed.

From the business point of view China New Year seems to have passed off much more successfully than was generally expected. No important failures have been announced, notwithstanding the unsatisfactory state of trade last year, and the aggravating evil of the depreciation of Kwangtung currency notes to nearly half their face value.

The Chinese newspapers, as usual, suspended publication for ten days, (beginning a week before the first day of the first moon), but other firms were content with three days relaxation.

THE RICHTER AFFAIR.

DISCUSSION IN JAPAN.

TOKYO, January 27th.

There has been a sensational sequel to the Richter affair in the Diet. Mr. Shimada charged the Ministers with the suppression of facts, and said that since the revision of the Treaties, the Judiciary had been only nominally independent. The Government, he said, arrested only petty offenders, and condoned the offences of the highly placed. He cited the counterfeit note case at Hongkong and the connection of the former police official, Koga. He also pointed out that Richter was allowed to leave the country, and he asked why they did not order the arrest of a certain Englishman, whom he named, and who, he said, was widely alleged to be connected with the Richter blackmail case. Did the Government intend to allow him to escape?

The Premier promised an investigation of the scandal.

The revelations of corruption have caused the widest discussion, and this will undoubtedly seriously affect the Naval vote.

BRITISH NAVAL ESTIMATES.

INCREASE NECESSITATES NEW TAXATION.

LONDON, January 26th.

The Daily Chronicle says that, after a most rigorous pruning, the minimum amount of the Naval estimates will be £83,000,000, and new taxation is inevitable. Cabinet Ministers think that after 1914 the Naval expenditure will tend to decline, but there is no very hopeful prospect of it. Meanwhile some of the other Departments will be starved in 1914 for the sake of the Navy.

SEVERE WEATHER IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, January 26th.

ARMY MANOEUVRES IN INDIA.

UNEXPECTEDLY EFFUSIVE WELCOME BY THE POPULACE.

CALCUTTA, January 26th.

The Army Manoeuvres in Eastern Bengal, which it was feared would excite animosity, has produced an effect which is described as bewildering. The Regiments were cordially and effusively welcomed and were presented with gifts, while triumphal arches were erected, and the Colonels of the Regiments garlanded with flowers. Masses of people are following the manoeuvres for long distances. This is unprecedented in India.

THE CORK ELECTION.

LONDON, January 27th.

The Nationalists have decided not to contest the election at Cork, caused by the resignation of Mr. W. O'Brien owing to the results of the Municipal elections, which the supporters of Mr. Redmond alleged tended to show that he had lost the confidence of the electors. The O'Brienites are jubilant.

LONDON'S INDUSTRIAL TROUBLES.

SYMPATHETIC STRIKE INVOLVING TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND MEN.

LONDON, January 26th.

The London labour troubles are being made the main feature of the papers, which produce copious illustrations such as Military and Police protecting coal vans, and Hospital Rugger teams, wearing jerseys and shorts, shifting coal for the hospitals, for which the strikers had refused permits.

The strikers decided that the employees of the big firm which intimidated its willingness to grant its men's demands shall not accept the grant.

Many observers are inclined to think that the strike will not last long if adequate protection is afforded the strike-breakers.

Sir George Asquith, of the Board of Trade, has offered mediation in the coal strike, and the men hold a mass meeting to-day to consider the offer.

The strikers have now decided to grant permits for the delivery of coal to the hospitals, provided that a member of the Union supervises the delivery.

There are signs of an early collapse of the coal strike. A number of the malcontents have resumed, and the free labourers are maintaining an almost normal supply.

It is estimated that already 20,000 building workers have gone on strike.

LATER.

Retorting to the London Master Builders lockout, the Unions have decided to call out the members of fifteen other Unions who are now working on jobs where the lock-out took effect. This means that about 25,000 men will be rendered idle.

MR. REDMOND AND ULSTER.

LONDON, January 26th.

Mr. John Redmond, speaking at Waterford, declared that the talk of Civil War in Ulster was absurd, and would not intimidate Mr. Asquith, who was as firm as a rock. He (the Irish leader) desired the Home Rule Bill to pass exactly as it stood. If changes were made it would be to buy the good-will of the Ulstermen, which was worth a big price, but he saw no prospect of that good-will being purchased at any price whatever.

ATTEMPTED ARMED ROBBERY.

Four Chinese, three of whom were dressed in long coats, went to the house No. 294, Third Street, the ground floor of which is occupied by a wealthy Chinese broker, on Sunday morning. Answering a knock, the master opened the door, and enquired of a Chinese who was standing there, his business. Then three other men suddenly appeared and collared him. One of them seized him by the throat, nearly strangling him, while others threatened him with knives. The broker, who is a strongly-built man, struggled with his attackers, and managed to break away. He shouted out "Robbers," whereupon the would-be thieves decamped, the broker following them. Police joined in the chase, and three men were arrested. Appearing before Mr. Hazeland yesterday, the men were remanded, on the application of Inspector Dymond, who said he would be prepared to go on with the case on Thursday. He said that knives, gags, and wire were found in the possession of the men.

LANE.

AN IMPRESSION BY A GRIFFIN.

If a Londoner of the real and undiluted Cockney clan could have been suddenly hoisted from his rule-of-thumb environment, and been dropped with equal swiftness into that part of Chinatown which during the past week-end assumed an aspect not greatly at variance with certain busy Jewish parts of the metropolis, he would not have rubbed his eyes to any dangerous extent. He would have been quickly at home, excepting certain drawbacks in his ignorance of out-of-joint English.

There would, of course, be more charm and fascination—perhaps alarm—in the weird-looking objects on the stalls, and the general arrangement a much more picturesque affair than is found in the vicinity of Petticoat Lane on Sunday mornings. More picturesque because of the colour-scene unintentionally created by an anti-like crowd; driftings from all parts of the earth. The vivid gowns of the Chinese, the more artistic colouring of the Japanese kimonos, the golden and red head-coverings of handsome Sikhs, a splash of scarlet tunics, and Navy blue; all mingling together and forming a chaos of colour which is in itself attractive. Yet one naturally looks for this in the East. The bubble of bargaining would perhaps disconcert “Entry” Awkins—it would be a storm of weird words, some familiar, but having an absurd ending. He might promptly put it down to a nightmare which was by no means unpleasant. For the Shylocks the wonderful influences of that dream would have substituted John; equally as keen and cunning a trader, just as submissive, and with a face similarly impassive when he almost whines out a price; whined in such a pitiful and plaintive tone that you hesitate to knock him down—in price, of course. And when you have made your purchase ignorantly and hurriedly, and without close scrutiny and comparisons, you subsequently discover that you have been “had” in the same old way as when you dealt with the oily family of Shylocks. You must be very wary of the innocent-looking John. He will take the most unscrupulous advantage of any ignorance which his prospective victim might betray in the money-ways of the East, and the New Year affords him rare scope for displaying his plausible stock-in-trade with which he plucks “plenty dollah” from the innocent. I write as a repentant victim.

But of the scene at the far end of Queen’s Road. It was truly Eastern. Such gay pictures of scenic bazaars have supplied poets with romantic verse when other sources proved irresponsible, and they are always read with a peculiar fervour and longing. There were delightful minglings of colour; of dress, and of blue and red and green reflections from huge lanterns and desecrated blow-fish. Stalls full of eerie-looking objects; fat and laughing joss-men, grinning monkeys, and green-eyed elfs which seemed ready to pounce at you from perches skillfully set upon vases of strange designs and hues. Here, at any rate, the elements of picturesqueness lurked in common lives and mean streets, for in addition to it all, you could look through the maze of people and catch the stall-holders in harmonious poses of unstudied attractiveness. It was a piece taken from Petticoat Lane in its Sabbath morning garb, only there was more colour and the crowd was strangely mixed, and there seemed to be some sort of music in the air. (I did hear Harry Lauder singing about a tickling sensation from the rear of a stall anything but Gaelic, yet deductions were obvious.)

Of course I made a purchase, carefully and diplomatically to the point of real impudence, but I was a victim to John’s ways. A fat old brass joss-man, wearing the captivating smile of corpulence and plenty had caught my eye. I was seeking him, having been brought under the spell of one of his fraternity who is even now smiling from his seat on a side-board. And this one seemed to be smilingly inviting me, and me only, to take him away.

How much?
Thirty dollahs!

What! Me wanchee one piece, no two pieces.

A smile by John, and then the bargaining began. Eventually I secured that cornucopian joss-man—who seemed to enjoy the wrangling; for he laughed heartily all the while—for twelve dollahs. While I was fondly conveying that fat-frilled being home he continued to smile, a smile of perplexity, tinged with sympathy, I thought. The expected happened. I subsequently made the galling discovery that the same brass individuals were purchasable—by a skilled dealer—for $5. However, my joss-man is laughing all the while, laughing himself into frills of metallic fat, and though he was obviously in with the unscrupulous John, he shall remain with me, if only as a warning whenever a hunt for treasure is made in Chinatown.

CORPUS.”

The hearing of the action was resumed in which Sir Francis Pigott, along with Mr. Alabaster (instructed by Mr. W. B. Hind and Mr. G. K. Hall Brutton), made application for a writ of Habeas Corpus, arising out of the Magistrate’s decision in connection with the trial of Chung Sau Nam on a charge of misappropriating $150,000, the monies of the Government of Kwangtung. The application was opposed for the Crown by Mr. E. H. Sharp, K.C., Mr. Eldon Potter, and Mr. F. C. Jenkin (instructed by Mr. R. F. C. Master, of Messrs. Johnson, Stokes & Master).

Sir Francis Pigott, continuing his arguments, said that when he closed on Friday he was dealing with what he might call the no-property argument, the argument which was directed to the fact that there was no property in the Kwangtung Government as alleged, and he was pointing out that the argument on that point was based on two of the arguments in the civil case. The two branches of the civil argument, he said, which applied in that case were, first the non-recognition argument; and that applied there because the property, the State property, was at the root of recognition by other States and provinces. The allegation of the property in the Kwangtung Government was wrong. Secondly, there was what he would call the de facto argument: that was to say, the rebellion argument applied there because the authorities, as he contended, showed that, in the circumstances of that case, the property could not be in the Provincial Government, even were there such a thing as a Provincial Government. The allegation of no-property in the Kwangtung Government was material to that charge, although the question had really no importance in extradition, and he referred to it because cases had been given in the form of English charges, and therefore it was advisable that he should clear the question in their Lordships’ minds.

The Chief Justice—I know it is not now necessary to prove the ownership of property; that being so, it does not help your case.

Sir Francis Pigott said it had nothing to do with extradition, but he referred to it because an initial mistake, he submitted, had been made in that case, putting an extradition crime in the form of English charges, so much so that it was almost in the form of an indictment, and that might suggest to their Lordships’ minds the application of the Criminal Procedure Act. It was, therefore, necessary for him to say that there was no possibility of property in the Kwangtung Government as alleged, and therefore the charge broke down; that there was no offence known to English law, and “you cannot sell property which does not belong to somebody.” The point at which he would ultimately arrive was that the Magistrate’s warrant of commitment must contain a specific statement of the English offence, and also of the offence which had been committed abroad, and when he said English offence, he meant the equivalent of the English offence. They would then see, what he hoped to prove, that there was no property in the Kwangtung Government of those cheques and money as alleged, and that there was no service in the Kwangtung Government by the prisoner. In the civil action the question involved in connection with the non-recognition argument was whether there was a right of suit or not; in that case it became essentially material because there was an allegation of property. Therefore, in face of that, it was essential on the Crown to show three things. They alleged property, that that money was the property of the Kwangtung Government, and therefore he submitted the burden was on them to show, first, that the Province exists and what it was;

secondly, what a Provincial Government was, and that there was such a thing; and, thirdly, if the Province exists at all, that it was capable of holding property, and having servants responsible to it. The Crown had to show that the Province existed in such a manner that the Courts could take judicial cognisance of it; otherwise, it was a mere blank. In that case no evidence had been tendered to the Magistrate as to the existence of the Province of Kwangtung. He was prepared to support, by what he thought was rather a cogent reason, why he contended that Province could only be an administrative area, settled, of course, by the Central Government. That was dependent on many things; administrative questions: historical, geographical, geological, and ethnological. There were many reasons which caused a country to be split up into provinces or counties. And he submitted, on the face of it, that except for their size, the provinces of China held no different positions than the counties of England. They knew, all of them who had studied early Saxon history, how counties came into existence. They were not quite so certain with regard to the counties of Ireland—perhaps his learned friend Mr. Potter had some idea (laughter)—and certainly with regard to the counties of Scotland they were somewhat in the dark. That was borne out by decisions in the English Courts. Proceeding, Sir Francis Pigott quoted Deybel’s case as showing the raison d’être of judicial recognition. Where a Court was perpetually having to act on its own initiative, perpetually directing its writs, it was bound to assume that it, at least, knew something. There was an allegation of property in the Kwangtung Government, and that, he contended, carried with it the onus to prove that there was such a thing as a Kwangtung Government. Certainly the Court could not take judicial notice of the existence of an entity or something else, referred to as something which was the owner of the property, because it was merely alleged that that something was a Provincial Government. The Court could not assume that something which it did not know anything about was the owner of property. When such an alleged Government came into an English Court to obtain something known in International Law as extradition, it must prove what it was alleging, that it was entitled to hold property. Dealing with the de facto argument, Counsel said it bore upon the no-property argument, because he contended, on the authorities, that the Provincial Government, always assuming it existed, did not, and could not, own its province. That, in the circumstances, assuming that the property belonged to anybody, it belonged to the Central Government, and therefore the allegation of property could not be supported. On that point his argument was that the Declaration of Independence established, in spite of its temporary character, a de facto independent Government, a rebel Government, and which he would call, for the sake of calling it something, the Republic of Kwangtung. And that Government, though it did not achieve success necessary to entitle it to be recognised, yet it was actual and effective in its acts of Government, and legal consequences resulted from those acts. Special consequences resulted. Assuming the property to have been in the Provincial Government before the Declaration of Independence, when the province was brought back into the fold, the property must have reverted to the Central Government. That had not to be taken as an admission that the property was in the Central Government, that was another matter altogether. It only established the negative, which was sufficient for those proceedings, that the property was not in the Provincial Government. Therefore, they got another order of ideas altogether. The primary documents were Chan Kwing-ming’s declaration, and these established that there was a Declaration of Independence. The supporting and verifying documents were the Cancellation Document, and the Black List—the latter did not seem to have appeared. To that they had to add the Crown witnesses. The money in that case was ordered to be sent to Nanking, to the rebel troops fighting against the Government, and that order clearly showed a connection which was recognised by the Chan Kwing-ming and the other rebel provinces. The evidence established four things: that there was a declaration of independence; that it was effective, as shown by acts of Government; that it was not limited to Kwangtung; and that it was crushed by the Central Government. The Puisne Judge—As to the latter, we have no evidence.

Sir Francis said that they had certain facts which could not lead to any other contention; General Lung was acting upon orders when he was sent to restore order with troops. In face of that it could not be denied that steps were taken by the Central Government, and that the rebellion came to an end. The idea which was suggested, apparently, was that that was a little hole-in-the-corner rebellion, started by Chan Kwing-ming, which fizzled out because of its own ineffectiveness; and that Chan Kwing-ming simply fled a few days afterwards. Yet the fact remained that the rebellion at Kwangtung was linked up with rebellions in the other provinces, that it was all governed by the Kuomintang, a political party in the State, and at a given time, action having been taken up by the Central Government, it came to an end. There was nothing in the authorities entitling Courts of foreign countries to ask the assistance of British Courts to help them from the consequences of war. He submitted that criminal proceedings were impossible, in a case like that, and extradition proceedings were absolutely out of the question. The initial fallacy in that case was that the facts were not put before the Court, he did not mean deliberately suppressed, but the Crown drew up the case as simply as possible. But the case was too complicated, he submitted, to admit of any ignoring of all the facts; the Courts could not be expected to understand the law applicable to a case like that without knowing the full offence. The law of rebellion was catch-as-catch-can, and they could do nothing to help it. Sir Francis then put forward a submission that the offence with which Chung Sau Nam was charged was a political offence, and added that if the extradition of Chan Kwing-ming had been asked for that would also have been manifestly political. And offences which were committed for a political purpose did not come within the law of extradition, because the offence was committed for a political purpose. Therefore, that being a political offence when applied to Chan Kwing-ming, it was also a political offence when applied to Chung Sau Nam. The whole way in which that case had been treated by the Kwangtung Government showed that they themselves regarded it as a political offence. Chan Kwing-ming’s act in getting the money from the Treasury was political, and Chung Sau Nam must have been his closest ally, or he would not have been trusted with the money. He was evidently appointed to the Treasury by Chan Kwing-ming, and a few days later was entrusted with the money to convey it to the rebel troops. That was a clear offence of a political character.

The hearing was subsequently adjourned until to-day.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN HONGKONG.

Early yesterday morning an outbreak of fire occurred at No. 275, Queen’s Road Central, a three-storied building. The ground floor was used as a shoemaker’s shop, the first floor as a wax shop, and the second storey was utilised as sleeping quarters. The fire originated on the second floor, and was caused by the explosion of fireworks on the verandah. The Fire Brigade speedily answered the alarm, and completely extinguished the outbreak in less than three-quarters of an hour. The first and second floors were gutted, and the ground floor was damaged by water. The premises were insured for $12,000.

A FRIENDLESS EUROPEAN.

At the Magistracy yesterday, before Mr. F. A. Hazeland, Francis Powell, unemployed, was charged with being drunk and incapable on Monday, and with behaving in a disorderly and noisy manner in the charge-room at the Wanchai Police Station. The defendant, in answer to the charge, stated that he was not drunk, but did not know anything about it. He was suffering from drugs.

Inspector MacHardy told his Worship that the defendant had appeared there before. Sometime ago he was knocked down by a motor-car outside the Belle View Hotel.

His Worship enquired if the man had any friends, and Inspector MacHardy said he had none. They had all given him up because of his habits.

A fine of $3 was imposed.

THE ANCIENT WHITE PEOPLE OF SOUTH AMERICA.

[BY DEREK MANSION IN "THE TIMES"]

Those who have read Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico" will remember what stress he lays on the prediction of the return of the bearded white god Quetzalcoatl, and on the effect it had on the mind of the Aztec Monarch. Montezuma II. had been, like some of his predecessors, a priest as well as a warrior, and the assurance of the identity of the ancient founder of Mexican civilization with the leader of the newcomers from the East obsessed his mind with the strength of a religious faith. The fair-complexioned reformer and civilizer had gone back to the land whence he had come; but in leaving he had promised to return; the lapse of time had made him a god, and his every word had become an absolute truth; and with the omens that preceded the appearance of the white men on the coast—inundation, famine, drought, and many an abnormality—there could be no doubt that the divine promise was being fulfilled. And the will of the Emperor-priest was paralysed by the thought; he dared not raise a sacrilegious hand against his god; his sceptre was about to pass to a nobler grasp.

Had Montezuma paused to think over the points of the compass and a map of his own dominions, his paralysis would have been cured; he would have seen that from the south of his kingdom the sun rose, not over the Gulf of Mexico, but along the great Isthmus; that Quetzalcoatl had come from Guatemala and not from Cuba or Florida, and that the ocean over which he would return was not the Atlantic but the Pacific. Had he thought over the Aztec name of his god his mind would have turned in the same direction; he would have recognized that it was from Guatemala came the magnificent feathers that went to make his crown, that the home of the Quetzal (trogon resplendens) was the tropical forests of the Isthmus. His ancestors, in giving the name of "Brilliantly Feathered Serpent" to the bearded white reformer, had pointed out the land and ocean from which he came; he was the wise and strong personality that had issued from the home of the Quetzal, and had returned to it.

THE WHITE PEOPLE OF CENTRAL AMERICA.
Had Montezuma been inclined to reflect on the peoples of the Isthmus, whom his dynasty had conquered, or tried to conquer, his thoughts would have turned to Guatemala and Honduras for the return of the white god. There they had found, or had left in ruins, dozens of beautiful stone cities that had evidently long preceded the Aztec and pre-Aztec cities of the Mexican plateau. Against them, and fierce warriors from the north like them, these cities had been built on precipitous spurs and strongly fortified. Where they had not yet penetrated with their conquering ferocity, on the slopes of the hills that looked to the north and on the plains of Tabasco and Yucatan, the cities, like Palenque and Uxmal, had made no provision for self-defence.

Here Montezuma would have found the prototype of his white god in the founder of the civilizations on the Gulf of Mexico. His name, Kukulcan, has the same meaning as Quetzalcoatl—"Feathered Serpent"—and was, in fact, its original. He was bearded and white, and he evidently came to the north from the old Guatemalan civilizations. He has the same forms as the white god of Mexico has in the sculptures and on the vases; and these characteristics of pale faces and beards are extremely frequent in the representations of gods both in Central America and Peru. And one of the singular things about the peoples of the Isthmus is that there is a large sprinkling of blonde-haired, blue-eyed, European-featured men and women in all the Indian tribes inhabiting the mountainous provinces that face the Pacific, in Guerrero, Oaxaca, Soconusco, Guatemala, and even in the more northerly Yucatan.

ANTIQUITY OF EUROPEAN CHARACTERISTICS.
This Europeanism of feature, skin, and hair is too widespread and too constant to be explained on the favourite theories popular amongst white men in Central America. Most of the fringe were Spanish and dark; the English buccanniers were too few and too coastal in their habits to go so far; and the German settlers, the last resort of accommodating theories, are too recent to account for anything ethnological in the region. The Indian physiognomy is recognized by all observers to be far more persistent than the European, which usually disappears in the second generation of cross-breeds. Only a very ancient infiltration can explain the persistency of this Europeanism, and even blonde Europeanism, in this region. It is marked on the story of those bearded white gods who founded Central American civilization, who came over the ocean and then westward along the Isthmus.

It is the same with the Pacific coast of South America. Most of the civilizations were initiated by bearded white strangers from the ocean, many of them resembling Manco Capac, the founder of the Inca dynasty, and Viracocha, the oceanic deity of the Ayacucho and of Tiahuanaco, in that they were golden-haired. And that they were golden-haired. And that amongst the faces of gods and kings and nobles found in the graves there is a considerable proportion highly European in feature and only a very small proportion that are oblique-eyed. In many large public and private collections this is very noticeable. Even Manco Capac, long before the Inca dynasty and empire which he founded had reached the ocean, acknowledged its oceanic basis and origin. On the terraces of his palace near Cuzco there is a rude carving which, when carefully examined, is found to represent a creature half-woman and half-fish, like our mythical mermaids.

ORIGIN OF THE WHITE CONQUERORS.
All these facts have to be taken together in order to find an explanation of any one of them. This Europeanism, much of it blonde or golden-haired, is confined to the coasts of the Pacific Ocean or the ranges near to them, just as the stone culture, and especially the great stone culture, is confined. Here, too, and here alone, we find American empires, and a rich development of barbaric civilization—the first conditions for the erection of such great stone monuments. Here, too, and here alone, we find the tradition universal of bearded white gods as the founders of these empires and civilizations—of bearded gods who had crossed the ocean. It is clearly the Pacific, for it is only two narrow strips on its coast in America that exhibit these phenomena. And, just as clearly, it is not the Japanese, Chinese, Hindus, or Egyptians that supply these bearded and often golden-haired strangers. Only great oceanic navigators and warriors with a blonde strain in their European humanity, and—with the megalithic art in their hands, can have migrated in sufficient numbers to impress this Europeanism and this art upon an alien race; and the only people in or about the Pacific who fulfil these conditions are the Polynesians. They are acknowledged to be Caucasian, that is, European, in origin. Their children have frequently bronzy hair, while many families have hair always red. Undoubtedly the first race in Polynesia was from Europe, and had a large sprinkling of blondes in its ranks. The last comers into the region were from Southern Asia, and brought the aristocratic negroid nostril and lips with them from Melanesia. As their islands kept sinking they streamed off in their canoes in all directions; many of them have made eastward to the coasts of America, and with their skill in war have carved out empires for themselves, and thus have given a basis for the development of the indigenous textile, ceramic and metal arts, and of the megalithic art which they introduced. Thus and thus only can be explained the European blonde streak down the Pacific coast of South America, and the appearance of negroid lips and nose in the sculptures that represent the ancient rulers of South America.

THE MIGRATION NORTHWARD.
But there is a second movement involved in this primeval immigration. The coast of Peru lost its rains many millenniums ago; but the ranges still go; them; and had the empires on the coast left the trees and bushes on these mountains untouched, their land would not have become the desert it now is. But they cut and hewed until the rains rushed down only in temporary torrents, and the people had to seek sustenance elsewhere. Those that had the Polynesian sea-craft amongst them went away north to the coasts of Central America, an easy voyage. Over and over again the ruins and pottery show strong traces of Peruvian influence. It is almost certain that some at least of the Central American empires had Peruvian initiation, even if their founders did not come from Peru. The civilizations of Peru are, some of them, from eight to ten thousand years old; most of those of Central America are younger, yet extend into the thousands. The city of Palenque was in its glory four thousand years ago, and most of the cities along the Pacific coast are older, while those on the Mexican plateau are more recent. The Aztec, like the Inca in Peru, was the last comer, and he destroyed as much as he absorbed; he turned the mild tenets of the bearded white god into the wild orgies of human sacrifice and cannibalism.
